Koch companies and their employees serve their communities in many ways. Here's a few examples of how our employees' generosity helped make the holidays bright in our communities.

More than 2,100 angels served during this year's The Salvation Army's Angel Tree drive

Employees in Wichita, Kan., have participated in The Salvation Army's holiday Angel Tree drive for 24 consecutive years. This year, employees in Wichita surpassed their goal with 1,363 children and adult angels served.

In Atlanta, employees marked their 31st year of participation in the Angel Tree drive, providing gifts for 800 angels. In addition, employees contributed more than 14,000 pounds of food to the Atlanta Community Food Bank.

Flint Hills Resources employees in Rosemount, Minn., participated in the Community Action Partnership of Scott, Carver and Dakota Counties' Holiday Giving Tree. Employees donated books, bicycles, clothing and other items to be distributed to local families.

Again this year, employees donated new toys, non-perishable food, personal care products and other household goods to be distributed to Wichita's domestic violence shelters.

Children receive Christmas gifts from Flint Hills Resources

Continuing its long time partnership with the YMCA in Corpus Christi, Texas, FHR employees helped at the YMCA's shoe give-away, giving about 90 children from George Evans Elementary and Oak Park Special Emphasis schools a new pair of shoes. In addition, employees gave 135 toys and gift boxes of food to children living in the Northside complex. The items were donated by Flint Hills Resources.
